

Higher Education Accessibility Behind and Beyond Prison Walls

Part of the Advances in Higher Education and Professional Development Book Series

Dani V. McMay (State University of New York at Fredonia, USA) and Rebekah D. Kimble (Houghton College, USA)

Description:

Numerous studies indicate that completing a college degree reduces an individual's likelihood of recidivism. However, there is little research available to inform best practices for universities and colleges in order for them to provide adequate support for returning citizens to successfully complete college degree programs.

Higher Education Accessibility Behind and Beyond Prison Walls is a critical scholarly publication that examines pedagogical techniques and best practices in the area of higher education for those currently incarcerated or attempting to complete college degrees post-incarceration. Featuring a wide range of topics such as online education, halfway houses, and student engagement, this book is ideal for corrections officers, parole officers, deans, rehabilitation specialists, government agencies, curriculum developers, administrators, academicians, higher education instructors, policymakers, researchers, and students.
