

Global Geopolitical Dynamics in Eurasia

Elnur İsmayil (İstanbul Medeniyet University, Turkey)

Description:

Eurasia, stretching from Eastern Europe through Central Asia to the Pacific, stands at the heart of global geopolitics. As a region rich in natural resources and cultural intersections, it remains a focal point for competing powers and shifting alliances. In the 21st century, the rise of China, the resurgence of Russia, and the strategic interests of the United States and the European Union intensify geopolitical rivalries across this landscape. From energy politics and military conflicts to infrastructure projects, global power balances are contested and redefined. Understanding the dynamics at play in this region is essential to grasp the broader shifts shaping international relations.

Global Geopolitical Dynamics in Eurasia explores geopolitics as a major conceptual tool for describing and defining the new international system. It examines global and regional geopolitical dynamics in the broader Eurasian region, including the Middle East, South-East Asia, the Black Sea, the Caspian Sea and Europe. Covering topics such as geopolitics, military infrastructure, and diplomacy, this book is an excellent resource for policymakers, government officials, political scientists, academicians, and researchers.
